

Sara Green has taught Social Studies in Kentucky for 13 years. The last five years, she has taught in Fayette County at Crawford Middle School. She has been an active voice in KEA and a leader at the school, district, and state level - providing a voice for teachers and students in Central Kentucky. She served four years on the Fayette County Education Association board of directors where she worked closely with many district leaders and state legislators to provide a world-class education for our students in Fayette County. She currently serves as chair of the Fayette County Political Action Committee, where she advocates for students and educators at the local and state levels of government.

Green has served in many other advocacy and leadership roles including School-Based Decision Making Council, chair of her school's Social Studies department, vice president of the Jessamine County Education Association, and EPSB recommendation committee. Green also served as a teacher representative at the Equity Convening in June 2013.

Her interest in providing an equitable educational system for all students began in college as she studied how history is taught and portrayed in our public schools. As a teacher at a school with a diverse population, Green has a passion for ensuring that students are given the skills, resources, and support to become informed and successful individuals.
