

Unity: In an Age of Uncertainty

Fernando Hislop, 8th grade, Morton Middle School

Together yet apart. In this time of uncertainty, everyone around the world must stay unified and together, yet we need to stay apart. With COVID-19 in our modern reality, we need to stay socially distant to help protect everyone else from contracting this possibly fatal, respiratory disease. But though we need to stay distanced from everyone else, we must be there for each other as being isolated from everyone else can be hard. To help protect everyone, we need to keep an open mind about everything in this world, especially during this pandemic.

While everyone is socially distancing themselves, and wearing masks, there are those of us who think that it is not worth it. But it is very important to continue these practices as they protect our vulnerable population, like the elderly, from this disease. When we protect each other, we are sticking together and helping to keep us on the road to a pre-COVID world again as well as being unified against this virus. This is an example of how we can be together yet stay apart.

There were and still are several controversies in the modern world, such as the Black Lives Matter Movement. If people were not so violent in their ways in general, then we would be able to focus on the defeating corona virus instead of fighting over topics that should not be fought over at all. Weather you are black, white, Hispanic, Christian, homosexual, or transgender, it doesn't matter. Because of this, we need to reunite, and fight together against things lile debating weather or not someone deserved to live. We can all come together and be one and the same, to that we can socially distance while being one.

This is why in these times of uncertainty, we need to be together yet apart. We need to socially distance ourselves from each other to keep the pandemic at bay, as well as being one and not having to attack each other over things like racism. We need to all join hands metaphorically and become a single entity, with our sole purpose of the progression of humankind.
